Success in Morrow County

We never know for sure what will be the last straw that leads to suicide or to the first fateful high that ends in addiction. What we all do know is the power of hope when a hand is extended in friendship. That happened for one little boy and his family last spring at the annual Morrow County Children’s Fair.

“Jeremy” had an overwhelming fear of police officers after witnessing a violent incident involving law enforcement. Local law enforcement attending the fair took the time to reach out to him that day. Through their understanding and patience, the little boy came to see that officers were there to help protect him and his family. There is no knowing what his fear and mistrust of police might have led to as he grew older, but Jeremy is likely to remember the kindness he experienced that day.

The Children’s Fair started in the spring of 2000 when local child-serving agencies recognized that too many children in need were not accessing the services intended for them. Community Counseling Solutions tackled this issue by organizing the Annual Morrow County Children’s Fair to expose children and families in the community to safety and health messages while engaging them in fun activity. The agency “vendors” range from mental health, treatment, law enforcement and public health to 4-H, soccer clubs and Parks and Recreation. There are always more than 20 agencies participating and any like-minded group who wishes to participate is welcome.

On that Thursday afternoon in mid-May, local child-serving agencies and organizations see around 500 parents and children walk through the door in three hours. Some are families that agencies have seen many, many times and know well. Some are the families that agencies need to reach but haven’t been able to.
